what truly fathers and sons should feel towards each other

From the Father and then from the son:

The only real thing I have accomplished in my life, and I'm so proud, is to have been able to pass along my genes and abilities to my sons. I've waited a few days to answer your message to me only because I'm reaching that point that won't allow me to think clearly. I want to be able to respond with as much feeling as you have given me, but just know every feeling you have, I have too. I'm always amazed at how closely my three sons think and feel as I do, knowing the three of you are thinking and feeling my exact thoughts and feelings. What else could a father ask for? I know I did not want to be an old fashioned father, like mine was to me. I loved him...Yes. I respected him...Yes, but I did not know him and didn't feel what I feel with you boys. So, I guess He missed out on me and I missed out on him.

As you may well expect, a father always shout the praises of his children, but I have some much to shout...all of it true...all of it so positive... And guess what, I know that I had a hand in making it happen. Thank you for expressing your feeling to me and best of all to the people you love and respect.

Those feeling you told me of working with Mike and me, are just as strong for me, but for a successful man as you are truly are it is even more shows just what you think is really important.

It goes without saying... I too love you
Dad

From the son:

I just wanted to take a moment to comment on your activities over the last month. The feeding, driving, hauling, flying, creating, fixing, working that you have done for Mike and his crew and his Christmas mall projects, is nothing less than awe inspiring. I was astounded at the level of work and work productivity you maintained from 9 pm til 6 am each night. You were patient, thoughtful and nothing less than brilliant in all of the projects you were assigned. Then after days of that to jump back in your truck and haul that crane back to New Jersey, while Craig, the young wipper snapper, slept on your bed in the back of your truck was nothing less than mind
